Sawtul:

Why do you support the Taliban?

You keep referring to OLD news, as Candid says, it's doubtful the Taliban today have regrouped to form an organised substantial force as we're led to believe from the media. However, it's clear the guerrillas operating in Afghanistan today are performing better than the old days you keep referring to.

In 1988, the Taliban took Mazar and proceeded to massacre the Hazaris, showing absolutely non-Islamic principles by shooting everything that moved, shop owners, cart pullers, women, children, people shopping etc., even goats and donkeys. No one was allowed to bury the corpses for six days, dogs were eating the flesh. This is taken from Ahmed Rashid's book called "Taliban, The Story of the Afghan War Lords" and is based on interviews by the UNHCR of survivors who fled to Pakistan.

There are countless other reports of the atrocities committed in those days by both what was to become the Northern Alliance, and the Taliban forces. Now, as usual, you can challenge the authenticity of these reports, you may challenge the pedigree of someone like Ahmed Rashid and what he has published. But you would have to come back with a credible challenge of a similar kind; i.e published report, or perhaps something like you'r own account, HAD YOU BEEN THERE.

Meanwhile, your childish attempts to persuade someone that the Taliban might be a good idea as a model for future Afghan society, are bound to fail.

Do you know who that woman is ?

She was first suspected of cheating on her husband, but since no proof was found she was let go. But later, she Murdered her husband in cold blood and was then arrested. The man you see in the video shooting her is not actually a Taliban, he is the brother of her husband, and he was allowed by the Taliban to take revenge by carrying out the execution.

I never said "Taliban dont kill anyone", I said Taliban dont kill CIVILIANS. They certainly Do kill murdrers and invaders and rapists etc.

Wa Salaam,

And where do you get this information from?

Just would like to know your sources?

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Taliban_treatment_of_women

Public execution of a woman, known as Zarmina, by the Taliban at the Ghazi Sports Stadium, Kabul, November 16 1999. The mother of five children had been found guilty of killing her husband while he slept, after allegedly being beaten by him.

I agree with that and also with the fact that 16% of the time Swat does speak the truth.

Here are a few quotes from Mullah Mansoor, successor of Mullah Dadollah (the most famous Taliban commander) from his recent interview:

"This is a advertisement (propaganda) of the Americans and infidels that Martyrdom operations failed and we kill innocent civilians our Martyrdom operations are such successful that the infidels dont know what to do..."

"We are here to help the Innocent and to bring islamic laws why would we kill our Supporters? This is senseless we try our best to avoidance civilians death...."

"We never use Opium and other drugs for selling and the goverment of Karzai and their Apostate supporter selling drugs and from 1992-2001 there were no drugs and drug trafficker yet every one in kabul do drugs and and...."

Mullah Mansoor is the brother of Mullah Dadollah whom I quoted on the first post on this thread (Mullah Dadollah was killed and was succeeded by his brother Mansoor).

Bush says that his soldiers don't kill civilians either.

Both the US, and Taleban militaries have horrific human rights records. US soldiers and Taleban fighters alike have murdered innocent Afghan civilians.

The truth is, you don't KNOW wether they kill civilians or not, but the point is, according to Western Media (actually according to almost all mainstream media, Western or Eastern) the Taliban are "proud" of murdering innocent civilians and children and they supposedly brag about it.

So the fact that the Taliban DENY killing civilians is significant because it shows that the image of Taliban as created by the Governments and Media is false, and even if we suppose that they kill innocents, the fact that they deny it shows that at the very least they aren't proud of it.

The Taleban does indeed kill civilians, and their crimes are reported by the same media and human rights groups who report US crimes.

I have never heard of any reports about the Taleban bragging about killing civilians. Of course neither they or the Americans would do so openly. They both love to cry crocodile tears for the victims of their policies and go ahead and continue killing.

If you discount reports of Taleban killing civilians as bogus, you should also do the same with reports of US soldiers killing civilians. In most cases, these crimes are reported by the same sources. Amnesty International is openly critical of both of these sides, and is neither 'pro-Taleban' or 'pro-US government'. They have taken a lot of flak from human rights abusers on all sides for speaking out against their atrocities. I have no reason not to trust them.

I don't care what Amnesty international say as they can hardly ever tell what's going on, living in another part of the world far away from the wars and bombings.

There are hundreds if not thousands of different ways and sources to prove that USA kills civilians (many US soldiers have confessed it, thousands of Afghans and Iraqis have witnessed it, not to mention many in other countries like Japan).
